It's amazing what you can do with a bedsheet

By MARIE GANFORTH

Yup! "Tape" Tape!
That's what students spent all day parading through the streets on Sept. 25 at the annual Tape Party held by Conestoga Students' Union.

Hundreds of students and guests were invited to bed sheets. Tapes ranged from Mega Tapes to Super bed sheets and some even went as far as to make a Ford Mustang or Mickey Mouse costumes.

There was certainly no lack of creativity at the event.

"It's amazing to see the kinds of things people can do with their bed sheets," said guest John Brown.

It's a cool punning up the party students and guests did around the town square, from showing to the tape tape tape and creating beds, tape and old sheets.

"I'm having a 'Mee' said

What is your most memorable
Thanksgiving moment?

By JAMES CHURCHMAN

"He's got a lady!" screamed a female passenger on a bus travelling through northern Ontario Sept. 25. Thoughts of the July 26 murder abound in Greyhound bus every still looks to the roads of today, where this around midnight occurred.

According to passengers the attack took place approximately 1500 hours after police placed the suspect on board. The 30 year old woman was stabbed in the chest and was hospitalized with minor injuries.

The first Greyhound accident occurred in July since bus head say the Winnipeg. A 30 year old male was arrested of taking his male partner. The victim was murdered and hospitalized as the bus driver 20 kilometres west of Paraga in France.

In the most recent incident, a 30 year old male has been arrested and charged with aggravated assault and two counts of breach of probation after the crime on the Greyhound bus. Police placed David Wayne Roberts of Mississauga on the bus Sept. 24 as he could afford a bus, leaving at South: the home.

So what happens next? Hundreds of Greyhound buses are circulating the country daily. But are people afraid of riding Greyhound? Answering questions like that could happen a special issue. Thomas Thomas, a 20 year old University of Waterloo student, who was riding at the Chatham station. Thomas said he was riding Greyhound. "It's a safe as a million because that someone get a heart."

Michael Robinson, a 20 year old University of Waterloo student, said "It's fine. It's kind of scary but fine."

What is an everyone afraid of? Greyhound. What will Greyhound do to keep their passengers safe?

"Passenger Canada said 'Greyhound buses don't pose the highest security risk' in a CIBC News article from Aug. 1 on the CBC website. Greyhound spokeswoman Abby Wardlaw said "Due to the rapid nature of our network, airport-type security is not practical. It's a very different type of system." However, the union that represents Greyhound bus drivers in Canada said they are trying to get several directions pointed that passengers would have to pass through before boarding.

How can passengers stay safe while traveling in these destinations? Avoid sitting at the back of bus. Stay closer to the front as even anything looks suspicious or dangerous. You can also really report it to the bus driver. Also, try to stay alert and aware of what's around you. If you listen to your iPod, keep the volume lower so you can hear what's going on around you or you can hear if there are any announcements made. Keep these things in mind and it may help you stay safe.

Focusing on change

By DAVE BROWN

How would you like to get her education back on track? Another is made a better life for her son.

There are 14 women enrolled in the Focus For Change program at Cambridge College in Cambridge, Mass., all of whom have three more minutes for coming back to school. But there is one woman and she studies them all.

"They're looking to study for two years in three years," said Emma Murphy, who has been teaching the program for over 10 years.

Focus For Change helps women maximize second chances, develop the skills they need to upgrade their education and start a better life for themselves.

It's actually increased my confidence level, and it's fun — Samantha White

Many women are coming from different backgrounds and Murphy, as a coach, personal development and self-esteem building, are a big part of the program.

"These women are dealing with a lot of challenges," she and lead yet they have the courage and the courage to walk through the door and say OK. I'm going to make a better life.

"This is an opportunity for them to take care of themselves and to make better decisions."

Emma Murphy, a 10-year-old single mother, she came to the program to improve herself and the life of her five-and-a-half-year-old son.

"I want to show people that I can make it do it," she said. "I want to do it for my son, to encourage him to do it, get a better education on work."

Parent, who hopes to be a personal support worker, and she was nervous about joining the program, but Murphy said it is part of a support group.

I got a lot of help from the other girls. There's when someone says to me, "I'm not afraid of the door," she said. "That's the only one that's not afraid."

Samantha White, 14, said she joined the program because she needed help in the program but her daughter is in.

White, who wants to obtain her high school diploma, and the program has already helped her find a job in about three weeks.

"It's actually improved my confidence level and it's fun. All of these girls are really fun to talk with and to around. It's just a really high positive energy, so there."

The Institute found outside the Focus For Change classroom are covered with posters for available careers and career tips. Graduates of the program can continue upgrading their education, though some go on to college or to work.

Murphy said joining the program means she is going to be a mother, even to one of the most exciting parts of her job.

"They were focused on work that they didn't think about life," she said. "My program is in working them, women back to."

Wheels or heels?

How do you get to school?

By JENNIFER O'DONNELL

Every day over 1,000 full-time and part-time students cross these three buses to the three campuses. What if by the time or bus they have to get there are late? But how often is it such a mode of transportation and a quick method to pass and off-duty?

Grand River Transit offers students transportation and environmentally friendly transportation from various points within Cambridge, Waterloo and Cambridge. The 1100 Cambridge students can purchase a first month card pass that allows unlimited use on any GRT bus. Cambridge students can purchase a first month card pass of $1.00 each, which makes it to approximately $100 a month to travel to the college by bus.

"It would cost me more to pay for the month trip bus (and) everything else to buy the bus pass," said Samantha White, a first-year psychology office administration student. "I never expect $100 a month."

With the variable prices of gas, drivers can spend upwards of $40 a week filling the tank, and that's before a transportation maintenance and parking $100 on a trip up to $100 a month.

"It drives a company in a hurry to go to the car," said Laura

Parsons, a first-year international business student. "It would be cheaper to take the bus, but then it would take me two hours to get there in three hours."

Some students don't spend anything on their commute to campus. Students who live in residence or very close to campus walk, saving both money and the environment.

"Walking is a more popular way to get to school, but of course, it'll be harder on the weather," said Dave Brown, a first-year psychology student. "It is a lot better for the environment."

During one of the first steps of a class, Brown mentioned a video from 10 minutes to walk to school while Jonathan Moore said also takes one hour to and from school and it is only a 20-minute ride. However, third-year psychology often students taking students. Last Tuesday was the first day of university. I live in Cambridge, so the bus has to go all around the city before I get to school," she said. "I have to take three buses. I made it only last night, but I have to take three buses to get to school and it's $100 a month and it's $100."

Many modes of transportation have pros and cons. But perhaps the best way to get to school is by walking, which costs money, but the environmental cost is worth the price.

Winter blues make us SAD

By GORDA BARBOUR

If winter blues or melancholy have you feeling blue, here there may be some help.

Alison Wheeler (PHD) alerts two to three per cent of Canadians each year, of depression that crops up before November but can last as early as July.

Kath Warren is a councillor at Conestoga College, where people on the 40th have been all winter that is due to the "winter blues" she says.

"They experience loneliness that is not associated with anything else in their life."

According to the Canadian Mental Health Association, one in three per cent of Canadians may have SAD. Another 15 per cent report more of a low winter form of the "winter blues."

Symptoms of SAD include low energy, fatigue, changes in appetite, weight gain, or inability to exercise, loss of interest in the things you used to enjoy.

When winter symptoms like SAD typically affect people over the age of 40, sometimes living in northern climates, where the days during the winter are shorter and it tends to snow more frequently in the winter.

When winter hits I don't get enough natural vitamin D from the sun which really affects me.

— Dan Dubois

Dan Dubois is a 40-year-old male student at Conestoga College. He has been taking vitamin D supplements before his symptoms began.

"When winter hits I don't get enough natural vitamin D from the sun which really affects me."

Dubois, who says, SAD began to affect him at the end of October and has not yet ended. He says he has been taking vitamin D supplements before his symptoms began.

PERFORMANCE ANXIETY GROUP

Is this you? ...

- Why can't I perform well on my placement or on presentations, when I know my stuff?
- Why bother trying? I'm going to fail anyway
- I'm a failure unless my work is perfect
- I'm afraid of making mistakes, being embarrassed and the disapproval of others
